

The Journal of Political Thought is dedicated to exploring the theoretical accounts and normative dimensions of political life. The journal showcases original undergraduate and graduate work in political thought, broadly conceived to encompass a variety of disciplines including philosophy, political science, sociology, history, legal studies, and economics. In elevating awareness and discussion of political thought within the university, the journal aims to provide a forum for students to critically engage classic intellectual traditions and contemporary voices alike.